The report, by Public Health England (PHE), found that 27.7 million people were exposed to blood-contaminated food or drinks in the past decade. Of these, 17.6 million were exposed through food or drinks bought from the high street, including food sold as "unadulterated", 7.7 million were exposed through food or drinks bought from "street food vendors", and 6.5 million were exposed through food or drinks bought from "blessed" establishments, whose owners are routinely exposed to bloodborne diseases during the meat production and slaughtering process. Nearly 1 million (0.9%) of all food and drinks bought from "blessed" establishments were contaminated with blood, the report found, while nearly 900,000 people became exposed to blood-contaminated food or drinks from food and drink sold from street vendors, of whom 525,000 (2.3%) got infected.
